

Trained as both a printmaker and photographer, I have taken the skills and knowledge acquired over the last 30 years to explore and develop new ways to create a visual narrative. My interest is in capturing the world that passes in front of my lens. There are no Kodak moments, but rather a syncopated succession of moments that combine to recall or define an event.

I studied photography under Bart Parker and have spent most of my career exploring and trouble shooting digital technologies. As a prepress technician I had a front row seat to the digital revolution sweeping both the print and photographic industries. Mastering color correction and several generations of electronic prepress systems, I made the transition to a digital darkroom easily, bringing with me previous experiences in Screen-Printing, Lithography and Color Separations.

Currently I split my time between my own photography and design practice and my role as founder and managing director of the Rhode Island Center for Photographic Arts, a member supported resource center and full-time photography gallery in Providence, RI. <https://www.riphotocenter.org/>
